The only way to dispense with the nuisance is by preventing persons from draining filth into it. As usual, however, the city has gone about it wrong and the people have very little hope of the present plan benefiting anyone. In places where formerly the filth was covered by water the water has been drained, leaving exposed several inches of slime and filth to dry and contaminate the atmosphere. The only way to do away with this "open sewer" is by preventing anything being drained into it. It would be bad enough if nothing but rain water went into it, to stand

MANY REPEATERS

VILLE TO REGISTER THERE.

Will Return and Vote the Democratic Ticket Next November at the General Election.

Voters of Louisville, Ky., will be reated today, tomorrow and Wednesday to a sample of genuine demoratic Indian tactics by a large delegation of the toughest, most experienced and best-known repeaters who could be gathered in St. Louis, says vesterday's Glove-Democrat.

A body of eighty of these "practical politicians," all of whom have done yeoman service for the democrats in recent campaigns in St. Louis, left the city early yesterday morning on an excursion train for the Kentucky metropolis. They departed under a leader whose ardent work in the interests of the local dmocracy has secured for him a good posiof their visit would not become during this interval the St. Louis repeaters will doubtless work wonders toward increasing the population of Louisville on the registration lists. When the election is held the services of these men will again be in demand to vote the fictitious names they are to register.

Two democratic tickets are battling for supremacy in Louisville, one being the regular democratic machine ticket, headed by Paul C. Barth; the other, an Independent democratic ticket, whose candidate is Joseph T. O'Neal. It is in the interest of the machine ticket that he St. Louis re-

WILLFUL MURDER

No. 4 of the Series

"Why? What more could we do?" I exclaimed in soft derision, looking round, however, to make sure that we were not overheard. "What more?" said Raffles. "Weil, I tion and walk on through the streets murder-for one thing."

"A matter of opinion, my dear Bunny. I don't mean it for rot. I've told is the man who's committed a murder and not yet been found out; at leas be ought to be, but he so very seldon. has the soul to appreciate himself Just think of it! Think of coming in here and talking to the men, very likely about the murder itself, and knowing you've done it, and wonder ing how they'd look if they knew it would be great, simply great! But, besides all that, when you were dramatic end of you. You'll fill the bill for a few weeks and then snuff out with a flourish of extra specials. You wouldn't rust with a vile repose for seven or fourteen years."

"Good old Raffles!" I chuckled. "I begin to forgive you for being in bac

"But I was never more earnest in my life. "Go on!"

"I mean it."

"You know very well that you wouldn't commit a murder, whatever else you might do.'

"I know very well I'm going to comhit one tonight!"

He had been leaning back in the sad dlebag chair, watching me with keer eyes sheathed by languid fids. Now be started forward, and his eyes leaped to mine like cold steel from the scal bard. They struck home to my slov. wits. Their meaning was no longer in doubt. I, who knew the man, reac murder in those hard blue eyes.

"Baird?" I faltered, moistening my lips with my tongue. "Of course." "But you said it didn't matter about the room in Chelsea?" "I told you a lie."

"Anyway, you gave him the slip aft-"That was another, I didn't, I

"I wasn't going to spoil your dinner Bunny, and I wasn't going to let you spoll mine. But there he was as large as life, and, of course, he followed us to the Albany. A fine game for him to play, a game after his mean old heart - blackmail from me, bribes from the police, the one bidding against the other. But he shan't play it with me. He shan't live to, and the world will have an extortioner the less. Waiter, two Scotch whiskies and so-das. I'm off at 11, Bunny. It's the only thing to be done." "You know where he lives, then?"

"Yes, ont Willesden way, and alone The fellow's a miser, among other things. I long ago found out all about Again I looked round the room. It was a young man's club, and young men were laughing, chatting, smoking, drinking, on every hand. One nodded, to me cough the smoke. Like a machine I nodded to him and turned back to Raffles with a groan.

"Surely you will give him a chance." I urged. "The very sight of your pistol should bring him to terms." "It wouldn't make bim keep them."

"But you might try the effect." for you, Bunny. Wish me luck." "I'm coming too."

"I don't want you." "But I must come!"

An ugly gleam shot from the steel "To interfere?" said Raffles.

"You give me your word?"

Bunny, if you break it"-

"You may shoot me too!" most certainly should," said Raffles solemnly. "So you come at your own peril, my dear man. But if you are coming-well, the sooner the better, for I must stop at my rooms

Five minutes later I was waiting for him at the Piccadilly entrance to the Albany. I had a reason for remaining outside. It was the feeling—half hope, Anna Bazinet, Osborn Mill No. 2, Fall River, Mass. half fear-that Angus Baird might still be on our trail, that some more immediate and less cold blooded way of dealing with him might result from a sudden encounter between the money leader and myself. I would not warn him of his danger, but I would avert tracedy at all costs, and when no such chromiter had taken place and Raffles and I were fairly on our way to Willes dea that, I think, was still my honest resolve. I would not break my word if I could help it, but it was a comfort to feel that I could break it if I liked, on an understood penalty. Alas! I fear my good intentions were tainted with a devouring curiosity and overfaid by the fascination which goes hand in hand with horror.

I have a poignant recollection of the hour it took us to reach the house. We walked across St. James' park (I can see the lights now, bright on the bridge and blurred in the water), and we had ome minutes to wait for the last train to Willesden. It left at 11:21, I remember, and Raffles was put out to find it did not go on to Kensal Rise. We had to get out at Willesden Juneinto a fairly open country that happened to be quite new to me: I could never find the house again. I remem-ber, however, that we were on a dark you before that the biggest man alive footpath between woods and fields when the clock began striking 12.

"Surely," said I. "we shall find him n bed and asleep."
"I hope we do," said Raffles grimly.

"Then you mean to break in?"
"What else did you think?"

I had not thought about it at all. The ultimate crime had monopolized my mind. Beside it burgiary was a bagatelle, but one to deprecate none the less. I saw obvious objections. caught there'd be a merciful and The man was au fait with cracksmen and their ways. He would certainly have firearms and might be the first to use them.

"I could wish nothing better," said Raffles. "Then it would be man to man, and devil take the worst shot. You don't suppose I prefer foul play to fair, do you? But die he must, by one or the other, or it's a long stretch for vou and me."

"Better that than this!" Then stay where you are, my good fellow. I told you I didn't want you and this is the house. So good night." I could see no house at all, only the angle of a high wall rising solitary in he night, with the starlight glitter ing on battlements of broken glass, and in the wall a tall green gate bristling with spikes and showing a front for battering rams in the feeble rays ost cast across the new made road. It seemed to me a road of building sites, with but this one house built all by itself at one end, but the night was too dark for more than a mere impression.

Raffles, however, had seen the place by daylight and had come prepared fo. the special obstacles. Already he was reaching up and putting champagne corks on the spikes, and in another moment he had his folded covert coat ecross the corks. I stepped back as h. ward and had my weight on the spike: ake assurance doubly sure, there he and corks and covert coat when he gave the latter a tug.

The garden was very small and new, with a grass plot still in separate sods, but a quantity of full grown laurels stuck into the raw clay beds. "Belis in themselves," as Raffles whispered "There's nothing else rustles so-cun-
